Mirrorpix Photographic Archive

In 1904, The Daily Mirror became the first newspaper to publish photographs. The publication became known as an illustrated picture paper - using the latest technology to print photographs rather than simply just cartoons or etchings. For the first time, the general population could see the news rather than just read about it or view it through an artist's impression.

The Mirrorpix Photographic Archives provide one of the largest visual collections of modern world history, told from a British perspective. For more information on the the Mirrorpix Photographic Archives click here.

We have selected over 3,500 images from the Mirrorpix collection, which have been divided into easily searchable categories covering the 20th century gallery below to view the collection.
